New to Routledge for 2010

Call for papers for Peer Review articles

Australian Planner is Australia's leading peer reviewed journal for the planning profession, and is the most read and influential planning journal in Australia and the Pacific Region. It is published quarterly, distributed in March, June, September and December each year.

Readership includes those involved in the planning profession including government officials, university staff and students, urban designers, urban, regional, social, environmental, economic and transport planners, as well as those involved in related industries, both nationally and overseas.

Australian Planner provides a forum for planning news, opinion and research and each edition of the journal contains a component surrounding a particular theme or topic of interest. Australian Planner has become a well respected publication and a very popular source of knowledge and information for professional planners and those involved in the built environment.

Australian Planner provides the planning profession in Australia and Pacific Region with a platform for:

- Content related directly to informing, educating and interesting those in the planning and the built environment sectors across Australia and internationally
- To offer content on a wide spectrum of planning related issues and to relate these issues to the built environment in the 21st century
- To ensure that planners have a forum for mature and informed discussion and debate on relevant topics
- To assist in determining and promoting the cause of environmentally sustainable planning practices
- To continually improve the professional reputation and standing of Australian planners
- To link Australian based planners with global trends

Neil Sipe (Griffith University, Australia), the editor, is seeking papers for the Peer Review articles section. These articles should be 4,500 to 6,000 words in length, any manuscripts exceeding this will not be accepted for publication. Papers submitted for peer review are subject to anonymous peer review by a minimum of two referees. Contributions should be made online at the Australian Planner ScholarOne Manuscripts site: <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/rapl>.

The editor is also seeking proposals for issues focusing on a particular topic, such as South East Queensland Planning (planned for September 2010) and Peak Oil (planned for December 2010). Please submit proposals to: ausplanner@griffith.edu.au.
